PROSEMINAR

One of the main tasks of anthropology is the description, and analysis and representation of culture. How do we justify anthropology as an academic discipline? How do we conceptualize social and cultural differences and similarities? And how do we “write culture” from data? This course examines the history of anthropology by examining theoretical and methodological foundations, and innovative methods of representation and writing.

Books for purchase:

Henrietta Moore and Todd Sanders, eds. Anthropology in Theory.

George Marcus and Michael Fischer. Anthropology as Cultural Critique

Terry Eagleton. After Theory.

Michel Foucault. Madness and Civilization.

Grading:

Mid-Term Exam 30%
Final Paper 50%
Class Participation 20%

The mid-term exam will be an hour-long examination covering the readings and seminar meetings from the first half of the course.

The final paper should be 15-20 pages long and is due on Monday, December 10 no later than 5:00 pm. The topic is open but it must relate to the general themes of the course. You may expand on a specific topic from the course or develop your own topic in consultation with the instructor. In any event, the topic must be approved by the instructor.

For each class at least two students will make oral presentations that present a critical evaluation (not a summary) of the readings for that class and show the relationship between those readings and a student’s area of interest (e.g., state formation, gender, ritual, hominid evolution, language change). Both presenters are required to distribute a list of discussion questions to the students and instructor at least 24 hours prior to the class.
